

EDITORIAL

Knowledge Has No Borders

Javad Parvizi, MD

Professor of Orthopaedic Surgery, Rothman Institute at Thomas
Jefferson University, Philadelphia, PA, USA

It is my great honor to be writing this for the inaugural issue of the ABJS. I want to congratulate the editor and the staff for launching this initiative. Although there are no borders for knowledge, research, and education the current geopolitical issues has prevented some scholars in different parts of the world from being able to reach all. Iranian scholars have suffered such difficulty. Since leaving Iran 31 years ago, I have continued to be proud of my heritage and have benefited from the friendship and mentorship of many Iranian scholars. During my visits to Iran, I have also interacted with orthopaedic surgeons and scientists. One fact that has become clear to me is that Iranian orthopaedic surgeons and trainees are truly dedicated scholars with immense potentials. They have clear vision and insight. I have enjoyed their probing questions posed with humility.

I am certain that given the degree of intellect, dedication, and commitment by the orthopedic community in Iran, this journal will be extremely successful. I want to congratulate the editorial board for their vision to generate this autonomous journal. I have no doubt that the ability provided to Iranian scholars to publish their work will stimulate further research among the young generation. In addition, providing this venue will allow the entire world to benefit from the high caliber research that takes place in Iran.

I want to congratulate the editor, Dr Ebrahimzadeh and his staff for launching this journal.

Corresponding Author: Javad Parvizi, Rothman Institute at Thomas Jefferson University, 111, South 11th Street, Philadelphia, PA, 19107 USA.
Email: parvj@aol.com

THE ONLINE VERSION OF THIS ARTICLE
ABJS.MUMS.AC.IR